Windows XP and Windows Vista users can try this application without the need to pay for it, while those running on Windows 7, and higher should consider the free trial first, before buying a license. Rating: 5/5 Summary : Internet Explorer 6 and Firefox 2.0 are two browsers whose last versions currently run on Windows, though operating systems like Vista are no longer supported, while Windows 2000 and XP were released several years ago, and support is now limited or phased out. As such, the two browsers are obsolete, and any dedicated users can carry out an install, when their system needs to be fixed. For the most part, Internet Explorer 6 is familiar to most Windows users, while Firefox 2.0 is a clean, and well-thought browser whose design brings to mind the benefits of Internet Explorer 4 and 5, with which it shares some resemblance. Both are easy to use, but have quirks, like most modern browsers. As you might have guessed already, we can start off by talking about Internet Explorer 6. Internet Explorer 6 is a browser that runs on Windows XP, and Windows Vista. For that reason, one should not assume that the browser was a good choice for PC and tablet owners that are running on Windows 7 and Windows 8, where Internet Explorer 7 and 8 are available. For the most part, it's a browser which doesn't look too shabby in terms of performance. Despite the fact that Internet Explorer 6 might lack certain features that the more advanced browsers offer, it remains easy on the eye, and designed to fulfill the browsing needs of Internet Explorer users on Windows 2K and XP alike. Internet Explorer 6 includes the basic features that one can expect from a browser, and it might even come as a surprise to some that the browser is able to run Flash, Java, and XML files. Internet Explorer 6 also has one major drawback, though: it's incredibly slow, taking as much as 20 seconds to load a page, and 20 to 30 seconds to load a web link. Internet Explorer 6 isn't a small browser, but not really large, either. The browser has a consistent and reasonably wide margin around the text area in which you'll view content. Default window size in the browser's default configuration is 1024x768, but this can be changed to 800x600, which is the maximum for Windows 7 and Windows Vista. Internet Explorer 6 also offers some fundamental tools, like a text-to-speech 09e8f5149f
