Loss of essential genes, e.g., Polybio, ZnT3, HtrA1, has profound effects in the CNS. Although significant progress has been made in defining genetic networks that respond to injury to oligodendrocytes, astrocytes, and to a lesser extent microglia, the core transcriptional response to loss of neurons has not been examined in detail. To address this gap in knowledge, we propose to employ a combination of microarray and bioinformatics analysis to identify early responses of the transcriptional program in response to injury, and to determine the extent to which changes in gene expression are associated with permanent loss of neurons in the mouse dorsal striatum and nucleus accumbens (NAc). The proposal is designed to identify early brain transcriptional responses to traumatic injury to different types of brain cells, and to determine the transcriptional programs that persist following loss of neural cells. Data generated from the striatum, which is a richly interconnected part of the brain that contains axons from different cell types, and NAc d0c515b9f4
