"MATE" is a full-fledged standalone adventure game made for the commercial crowd. It fully represents our style and our vision for games, and we think that it is a worthy investment for a small studio. We are totally addicted to the classic adventure game genre and we really want to bring it to the new generation. The aim of this game is to challenge traditional adventure game puzzle types with many innovative new ones, while maintaining a high sense of "fun". Latest Activity "Hey, Today I just successfully made my first game using xDE. I am no longer at my university so I can't give you a direct download but the link to download mine is here: If you have any questions please ask me on the xDE forum, the link is here: " Hello there, I'm new to the site. First off, this game is pretty awesome. I spent the last 4 hours working on this website and I finally figured out how to make all three characters heal and i even made the background to change when you hit a button. I cant upload the comicbook format so I'm trying to upload it through the website with the description. The files for the game is below. Revert Media Home | www.revertmedia.com Current Version: 6.4 Why do I need an iframe? This is the web site of the game. The game itself does not need an iframe. We're using an iframe because we want all links on the web site to be accessible with the game itself. That way you can play the game directly from the same page. How to Download: 1. Click the play game button on the left. 2. Click the "Download" button on the bottom, and save the file. 3. Run the game by opening the file you just downloaded. Special thanks to: - Marcin Wanatowski (freexst) - for coding/modifying in XDE, and letting me use his code in my game. - Dave Stone (dstoney) - who deserves

What's new:

was the contemporary name given to a body of armed special agents of the FBI and other law enforcement agencies who strode the streets of São Paulo, Brazil, on nightly patrols during the late 1980s and early 1990s. The group was created during a period when the city saw a surge in armed robbery, particularly of tourists, and large numbers of police were needed to cover the lucrative territory. As armed guards they were street cops in name only; they were not required to have any official police powers, and were not legally considered to be part of the city's police force, meaning they were protected by the same law as criminals. The operation, which was conducted mainly in night-time armed patrols, had its genesis in early 1987, when a number of high-profile armed robberies were carried out in São Paulo, which had a reasonable number of night-time tourism businesses. Pockets of downtown had already been securitized, with loads of shoot-on-sight police, thanks to a highly lucrative drug trade. The first Special Action Unit to take to the streets was formed in March of that year, consisting of a handful of men, armed with submachine guns and seeking nothing more than minimum force laws. As the scope of the operation expanded, the numbers of involved became more untenable, and the group was finally folded into a more representative armed unit, known informally as “Grupo de Batalhões Especiais” (Special Battalions Group). At the time of its heyday, however, it was known as “Grupo de Botas (shoe patrol)”, and the name stuck until it died. It was often mistakenly referred to as the “Aliança de Botas” (Shoe Alliance) by the media, which barely ever bothered to check the group’s official name. Between late 1990 and 1993, the security situation in São Paulo, which had begun to improve somewhat, deteriorated again, as opposition politicians successfully stirred up resentment against the armed guards by falsely claiming - and in some cases, resorting to actual fraud - that the guards were committing excessive violence, or were even simply robbing daily business owners of ATM (automated teller machines) access fees. As a result, 90% of the city’s Downtown security forces deserted, and they never returned to policing the streets. By the end of 1993 the group had been effectively disbanded, having failed to bring
