E-NABLE: a "revolutionary new way to make it possible for anyone to experience the joy of working with his/her own hands" E-NABLE enables anyone who can grasp the size of a spool of thread to make their own thread by hand. It is an affordable, compact, and space-saving system and can be used in the home or office, in clothing, and by craftspeople. E-NABLE has been featured in numerous international publications, including St. John's Church Magazine, TIME, and Good Housekeeping. The ENAMEDOWNER (a cross between an ENAMELOVESOCK and a garment) was developed by a father and son working out of their Los Angeles garage. A father and son, Don and Peter Alisul, created the ENAMEDOWNER from the fabric scraps that they saved from practicing the lifelong skills of woodworking. Their company, EMACRON, provides low cost workshops and schools to teach others how to use their machine. The cost of the workshop is $400 and the workshop teaches how to create ENAMEDOWNERS and other products. Takagi and Tokyo, Japan. KETO File was born when 4 engineers in Tokyo Japan began making a product inspired by the takagi, a Japanese farming tool. The invention allows the user to easily select the angle of the tool and the size of the space for cutting and the amount of pressure the user can apply. KETO File brings convenience to cutting in all kinds of work. LEGO (the cross between LEGO and TAKAGI) was the first product developed by the LEGO Group in the early 1980s. Today, LEGO is the world leader in the production and sales of the
