Racing Cars. 90 9. Incl. System Requirements sg. TheÅ .Ethnic Variation of Familial Hypercholesterolaemia Gene Polymorphism in South Indian Population. Familial hypercholesterolaemia (FH) is an inherited autosomal dominant disorder characterised by raised low-density lipoprotein cholesterol (LDL-C) and risk of premature coronary heart disease. The genetic basis of FH is due to mutations in the low-density lipoprotein receptor (LDLR) and apolipoprotein B genes. In this study, three single-nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) in the LDLR (p.R3500Q and p.R3449Q) and apolipoprotein B (p.R3500H) genes were genotyped in FH patients (n=164) and controls (n=108) from South India. The distribution of variants and allele frequencies in FH patients and controls were compared by the chi-square test. This study showed that the frequency of the LDLR p.R3500Q variant in FH patients was significantly higher as compared to controls. However, the apolipoprotein B p.R3500H variant was more common in the control group. The p.R3500Q variant was absent in Indian population in dbSNP data base, indicating that this variant may be a FH-specific variant. The data showed that this variant is a gain of function and increased the LDL-C plasma levels. The p.R3500Q variant may play a role in raising serum cholesterol levels in South Indian population. Mitofusin-2 induces apoptosis and the DNA damage response in HT-29 cells. Mutations in the mitofusin-2 (Mfn2) gene are responsible for the development of Charcot-Marie-Tooth disease, which is associated with prominent neuropathy. However, a direct role of the protein in cell death is not known. We investigated the effect of down-regulation of Mfn2 on apoptosis. Levels of proapoptotic proteins (Bax and Bak) were elevated, while those of antiapoptotic proteins (Bcl2 and Bclxl) were decreased. This was associated with cleavage of caspases and apoptosis in cells transfected with anti-Mfn2 small interfering RNA. The canonical apoptosis signaling pathway was also activated by Mfn2 inhibition; activation
