Virtualbox Virtual HostingThe present invention relates to a device for measuring the pressure of a fluid in the passage of a tube to control the flow of the fluid, whereby the rate of flow of the fluid can be controlled. The invention is more particularly directed to the field of pressure-measuring control of the flow of fluids and gases. It is particularly intended to control the flow of air or gas in an enclosure such as a cathode ray tube or a liquid crystal display (LCD) panel to protect and insulate the glass envelope.

In the prior art, the absence of any sealing at the edge of the screen or panel, or any type of flexible sealing element, means that the sealing action consists of one or more lines of adhesive tape applied to the glass and holding the glass against the panel. This method has the serious drawback of being ineffective on fragile glass panels.

Moreover, it can lead to the need for an excessively high level of dust protection (typically between about 50 mg. and 500 mg. per square meter) and the use of tapes and adhesives that are costly. Other solutions involve placing foamed pads or belts around the edges of the glass, such as those shown in U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,589,409 and 5,399,182, which mitigate the problem of the glass being subjected to impact but do not provide a satisfactory solution since the pads or belts must be replaced often. Accordingly, it is an object of the invention to provide a device for control of fluid flow through the passage of a tube, which is effective,
