In a computer system, an access control entry (ACE) table is a table containing information about access control entries (ACEs). A user may access a resource (e.g., a file) in a computer system by specifying an identifier for that resource. For instance, a user may request access to a file by specifying the filename for the file. The computer system then looks up the ACE table to see if the user is permitted to access the file. The ACE table may include the following entries: (1) an identifier of the resource (or a descriptor of the resource); (2) an identifier of a user who is permitted to access the resource; and (3) a permission value that indicates whether the user is permitted to access the resource or not. The ACE entries are sorted (e.g., by the identifier of the resource), and a number of ACE entries from the top of the table are required to be accessible to the user (e.g., to satisfy a read request). The ACE entries also are subject to aging. Each entry is subject to aging by a time interval (e.g., one minute). Upon aging the entry, the permission value is set to a new permission value. The new permission value indicates whether the user is permitted to access the resource or not, by indicating whether the entry has been aged to the new permission value or not. Typically, a new permission value is set for the entry by a simple bit-flip of the old permission value. Upon aging the entry, the user identifier in the entry is also aged. This can be used to perform a look-up in the ACE table to identify whether a new access request is from the same user (as represented by the user identifier in the entry). This eliminates the possibility of resource sharing for a user who no longer has access to the resource.

If a corporation is involved in a criminal conspiracy, NOTHING it does can ever be truly private or 'legal'. So we need to stop trying to justify an unlawful profit by bringing up 'things that were perfectly legal at the time'. This simply won't cut it, it makes the government (and us) look like apologists for 'profit-seeking'. That could never happen. Anyone who grew up here in the US understood this. #1 - I've just
