Q: What is the difference between the two definitions of direct product of groups? Let  $G$  be a group, and  $H$  be a subgroup of  $G$ . The direct product of  $G$  and  $H$  is defined in the following ways: 1) A direct product of  $G$  and  $H$  as a set is  $G \times H$ . 2) A direct product of  $G$  and  $H$  as a group is the Cartesian product  $G \times H$  whose operation is defined as follows.  $\forall (g_1, h_1), (g_2, h_2) \in G \times H$ $(g_1, h_1)(g_2, h_2) = (g_1g_2, g_1h_2)$  I am not really sure how these two definitions of direct product of  $G$  and  $H$  are different. Could someone give me a well-explained example? A: It may help if you realize that the second definition is exactly a special case of the first. That is, it is the set of all ordered pairs of the form  $(g, h)$  where  $g \in G$  and  $h \in H$ , with the action of addition on the set  $G \times H$ . When thinking about a group we generally treat it as a set with a group operation, and then such things are the same in both approaches. But you're really not obliged to think about a group as a set of elements with an operation. A group is just a set with an operation, and all you're really being asked to do is be able to describe an operation on any set, that is, to be able to define a function  $G \times H \rightarrow G \times H$  by  $((g, h), (g', h')) \mapsto (g'g, h'h)$  for all  $(g, h), (g', h') \in G \times H$ . This generalizes the definition of the Cartesian product you know and love (but not all "groups of pairs" really are groups). There's also the issue that in group theory, and particularly in the context of direct products,  $G$  and  $H$  are usually groups themselves, and the direct product of  $G$  and  $H$  is really

Safeguard Self-Protection Children and adults with autism have difficulty assessing risk and reacting appropriately in an emergency. A recent report shows these issues make some children and youth with autism 10 times more likely to experience serious injuries compared to the general population. While the frequency and severity of injuries to people with autism is often overlooked, untreated or misdiagnosed, the impact on their families can be devastating. These individuals can present physical, mental, and behavioral challenges that may keep them from being able to act safely on their own. A recent review identified the following serious health risks and behaviors, causing significant burden to the caregivers of individuals with ASD and impacting their ability to remain safe: Choking is a common cause of injury in children and youth with autism who experience challenges with oral motor control, speech, and understanding social cues. Most children and youth with autism will suffer some type of skin injury as a result of aggressive behavior. Some individuals with severe autism are known to engage in self-injury, while others will injure others by biting and scratching. A Review of Injuries in ASD In 2017, researchers published a study showing that people with autism are at 10 times greater risk of serious injuries and illnesses, such as accidents, fatal fires, emergency hospital admissions, and dental problems. The report was published in the journal Emergency Medicine and Trauma. The study examined the current state of literature regarding injuries in children and youth with autism spectrum disorders (ASDs), as well as the consequences associated with these injuries. The researchers concluded that people with ASD experience injuries and illnesses that are often neglected and untreated, which can affect their physical, emotional, and financial well-being. The study found that these individuals were 10 times more likely to suffer serious injuries, such as: Drowning Fire-related injuries Electric shock Fall-related injuries Car-related injuries Hunting or other animal-related injuries Poisonings Trauma-related injuries The authors of the study recommended that people with ASD and their caregivers be familiar with the risk factors for injuries in this population and that services be provided by experts with experience in autism. Researchers recommended the following to reduce risks: All parents and caregivers should educate their children and adolescents about the hazards of play and explore possible barriers to play. For children and youth with ASD, caregivers should focus on reducing hazardous behaviors that put
