"They are the website of the security company Secunia, which aims to highlight security vulnerabilities in Windows and other programs, Fidus was responsible for one of the deepest, most complex security bugs ever discovered. The BBC has identified a new flaw in Windows Vista that allows hackers to turn on a PC without authenticating themselves, provide a username and password and gain remote access. Unlike Microsoft's own vulnerability discovery program, the BSod Analyzer, the firm said its discovery wasn't "in the same league" as exploits published by the US National Security Agency or Russian hackers. In an email to the BBC, Secunia said it had built its own system to discover vulnerabilities and called on other companies to contribute similar discoveries. "Shodan is a well established search engine for vulnerability and exploits and is a source of some of the most well known and proven vulnerabilities and exploits, including the most recent zero day vulnerability that almost effected 20 percent of the world's internet users on Wednesday," Fidus, via its website, said. "Today, we decided to make a small example of the algorithms we have built and the data we have. We hope to gather contributions from other companies that have similar data to ours." Microsoft apologised for the "serious" flaw and said it had fixed the issue within the hours of Secunia's discovery. In a blog post, the software giant said it was still in the early stages of investigating the BSod Analyzer bug. Microsoft Chief Security Officer Tom Burt said the company would be contacting those who were affected by the bug, adding it was "too early to speculate on the damage or timeline for remediation" The report includes 12 known vulnerabilities in version and build numbers of 7 and 2008 R2 as well as 8 other bugs that Secunia has "noted". According to the company, more than half of the vulnerabilities are reported as "remote code execution". Apple boss Tim Cook, who is meeting with Microsoft's new CEO Satya Nadella, was warned of the Microsoft flaw and no iPhone was hit by it, the company said. Microsoft said it would roll out a patch to its Windows Update service on Wednesday. The first public disclosure of the bug came in a blog post by Swedish researcher Mikko Hypponen, who was subsequently confirmed to have reported it to Microsoft. But the vulnerability was uncovered by an independent security company.
