Q: Does an event get lost in the shuffle? Let's say I have function foo(event) { event.preventDefault(); event.stopPropagation(); setTimeout(function() { // do something }, 1000) } $(document).on('click', foo) When foo is called, the .on's event handler will be called. However, foo's event never makes it to the DOM and I never see the click event. If I change $(document).on('click', foo) to $(document).on('click', foo, function() { alert("hello") }) then I see the alert. Now, with a few changes in foo, I can get the initial click event to propagate, but then it never makes it to the setTimeout handler (because the event has been stopped by the .on) Am I missing something, or is an event that is sent to foo going to be lost in the shuffle? EDIT: new based on Ashwini's answer: function foo(event) { event.preventDefault(); event.stopPropagation(); setTimeout(function() { // do something }, 1000) } $(document).on('click', foo) $(document).on('click', foo, function(event) { alert("hello") }) Now I see the hello message. A: The event object will automatically be given to the callback function. To investigate the mechanisms of electroacupuncture at "Yanglingquan" (GB 34) in treatment of cough, the effects of electroacupuncture at "Yanglingquan" (GB 34) on the cough reflex and respiration of rats were observed by mechanical stimulation of the external carotid sinus nerve in the daytime and under the light and dark of the day. Fifty-six Wistar rats were divided into 7 groups, the normal control group, the common carotid vagotomy group and the electroacupuncture groups. The rats of the electroacupuncture groups received electroacupuncture at "Yanglingquan" (GB 34) at different frequencies and intensities. The mechanical stimulation of the external carotid sinus nerve induced a cough response in all rats. The response decreased after electroacupuncture at different frequencies in all electroacupuncture groups.

The response decreased after electroacupuncture at 100 Hz, but increased after electroacupuncture at 2 Hz. The response decreased after electroacupuncture at a low current density (0.5 mA) but increased after electroacupuncture at a high current density (1.5 mA). After electroacupuncture at "Yanglingquan" (GB 34), there was a frequency effect on the cough reflex. The maximum suppression was achieved at 100 Hz, which was equal to the traditional acupuncture frequency. The rapid pace of change in technology has meant that there is now a 24/7 workload with the demand for workers able to work quickly to keep pace with the changing environment. This has resulted in new trends in workplace behaviour and a higher demand for workers able to respond to changing and evolving technological needs. The continuous innovation of technology has meant that over the last 10 years the pace of change has been the greatest it has ever been with a surge in emerging digital technologies making up just over 50% of the workforce. Likewise, there has been a huge change 6d1f23a050
