The struggling team and its fans are doing their best to keep hope alive as the 25-year-old forward continues to miss games with a concussion — and says he may play at some point during the home-and-home with the Carolina Hurricanes this weekend. Brassard has played in only 12 games this season and has been less effective than in the lockout-shortened season. He's had 13 assists and a plus-minus rating of minus-18 and has been a major disappointment for a player who was one of the Senators' top offensive options last season. "I'm not thinking about playing," Brassard said. "I just go out and play and don't think about the situation. I know it's going to get better and I'm going to play soon." Brassard has suffered at least one concussion in each of his previous 6d1f23a050
