This is discussed on the Meta discussion for writing style, but I would be curious to see if there are any down votes or anything else that might be brought up regarding this. As of right now it looks like we are editing questions in the order that they come in. Is there something that would prevent us from editing the style guide first before questions? A: As always, I believe that there are no hard and fast rules about this, but in general, the style guide should be used as a starting point. If the question is poorly written and would benefit from revisions (such as a case of broken English, etc.), then there are of course many different valid ways to approach the situation, and that is why editing should be always done with care. However, the style guide is a set of guidelines. We are also all individual learners, so we can all have our own opinions regarding certain aspects of the style guide, and it is perfectly fine to put that opinion forward in a question or answer, regardless of whether the author of the question agrees or not. If one feels that a particular suggestion is not useful (e.g. if you feel that the subject of a question isn't sufficiently specific or doesn't warrant the use of a blockquote), then of course you should express that opinion in a way c6a93da74d
